Let's assume that a 5% profit has been agreed to in a contract for all change orders. In order to convert the 5% profit to an appropriate markup on costs, use the same calculation as noted for overhead.

(Profit % ÷ all costs w/ overhead %) or $(0.05 \div 0.95) = 5.3\%$. By marking up the total by 5.3%, you will achieve a 5% profit.

The True Costs of Estimating Change Orders

Contract amendments, also known as “variation orders” or change orders,” can be manipulated to facilitate corruption or fraud schemes. For example, a contractor, acting in collusion with project officials, can submit a very low bid to win a contract, knowing that promptly thereafter the officials will approve a change order to increase the price, allowing the contractor to recover its profit and fund bribes.

Potential Scheme: Change Order Abuse

A change order is an amendment to a construction project contract, signed and mutually agreed upon by each relevant party,
